

SUSTAINABLE TEXTILES

SUPPLY CHAIN SOLUTIONS

Sustainability isn't a marketing trend – it's an integral part of today's textile supply chain DNA. As global demand for more sustainably-made textiles and fashion apparel continues to grow, brands and retailers are ramping up new programs and practices to reduce the negative environmental impacts of many traditional textile production processes. Why? Consumer demand.

Today's consumers are shopping for garments with smaller environmental footprints, and which are produced in socially responsible ways. This demand, in turn, is driving brands and retailers to reconsider current practices across entire supply chains, and is encouraging designers to explore new methods and technologies in their fabric and finishing choices.

LISTEN TO THAT SUSTAIN...

Here at Texollini, we pride ourselves on being a sustainable plant:

- Compared to traditional machine processes, our dyeing machines require:

50%

Less Water

45%

Less Natural Gas

30%

Fewer Chemicals

- We process all automated dyes and chemicals directly into our dyeing process:

More
Efficiency

More
Accountability

Less
Waste

- We are leaders in stretch performance fibers, which are at the forefront of material trends as consumers demand soft, sustainable, efficient fabrics.

- We process wool blend fabrics with our proprietary process, eliminating negative environmental impacts.

- We are expanding our recycled fiber offerings: REPREVE (recycled Nylon and Polyester), Organic cotton, recycled cotton and polyester are blended with natural fiber, such as TENCEL® – with its own sustainable story.
